

BLAIR M. HOYT

PRINCIPAL / WASHINGTON, D.C. METRO OFFICE

Ranging from large corporations to small inventors, Blair's clients benefit from the attention he devotes to solving their intellectual property challenges. As a result, his clients trust his business sense and multi-dimensional legal skills to strategically manage their high-value patent assets and global IP portfolios. Blair adds value to his clients by staying on top of changes in the law through legal organizations and intra-firm committees, and parlaying the insights he gains to provide superior counsel on the ever-changing IP landscape and how it affects his clients' businesses.

Blair works closely with clients to discover their core needs and strengths, and advises each one through a specific, customized strategy to achieve their unique goals. Coupled with his years of experience in preparing and prosecuting patent applications, as well as providing expert opinions of counsel, Blair delivers results that mitigate each client's exposure and risk while increasing the value of their intellectual property assets.

BACKGROUND

Blair spends most of his time outside of work with his wife and three daughters experiencing the many historical and agritourism sites that Virginia has to offer. In what little time remains, Blair reads books about whatever topic interests him at the time and tries to watch or attend as many Virginia Tech sporting events as possible. Blair never hesitates to share his passion for his alma mater, Virginia Tech, with whoever will listen.

Prior to practicing intellectual property law, Blair worked as a Computer Technician for the Defense Information Systems Agency.
